What is the best way to prevent catching viruses like the Bird Flu?...

Cleaning your hands could be the simplest method of avoiding viruses like the bird flu, influenza, the common cold and even SARS.

The health departments of the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom and Australia all recommend you wash your hands with soap and warm water as a basic precaution against these viruses.

Germs like the bird flu, common cold and influenza virus usually hitchhike their way into your body through contact between your fingers and the mucus membranes of your eyes and nose.

When your mother told you “don’t touch your face with your hands,” she was providing an excellent anti-viral recommendation.

How does a virus make it onto your hands?

Airborne droplets from a cold or flu virus can travel up to eight metres.

You can pick up the virus where the droplets land on frequently touched objects like doorknobs or telephones.

Even shaking hands is a common method of transmission.

Once the virus is on your hands touching, rubbing or scratching your nose or your eyes completes the cycle of transmission.

Can you catch bird flu from eggs and poultry?

This could be possible. The question is answered in detail along with how you can protect yourself in the full “Advanced Hygiene Secrets” audio CD and report.

Details are at the end of this report...

Don't touch your face with your hands...

Simply avoiding the habit of touching your eyes, nose and mouth can reduce your chance of contracting both influenza or bird flu.

But it is human nature to touch your face subconsciously.

We even touch our faces while we sleep.

We can also pass on a virus to someone else through hand to hand contact so hand washing becomes especially important in reducing the spread of viruses.

Clean your fingernails...

Cleaning your fingernails requires particular attention.

Experiments in the 1960's by world-renowned skin specialist Dr Albert Kligman found over ninety percent of viruses and bacteria on your hands take refuge under your fingernails and thumbnails.

The skin under your fingernails lacks the horny layer that helps protect the rest of your skin.

Without this horny layer and with your fingernails for protection viruses and bacteria find it far easier to survive.

With this in mind these are some basic guidelines for effective hand washing gathered from the various health departments and the National Hygiene Foundation in the United States...

1. Using a natural soap, apply or push the soap up under your fingernails and thumbnails then wet your hands with running water.

Warm water is preferable as many viruses lose their natural attraction to your hands when exposed to heat.

2. Spend at least ten seconds rubbing your hands together to work up a lather.

Rubbing your nails across your palms will help clean your fingernails.

Rinse your hands with more warm, running water.

3. Drying your hands with a disposable paper towel is recommended over cloth towels, which can harbour bacteria and viruses.

Pay special attention to drying your hands thoroughly. You pass infections more easily when your hands are wet.

If possible turn off the tap with a paper towel to avoid recontamination of your hands.

4. Wash your hands every time you go to the toilet and whenever they're soiled. Pay particular attention to hand washing after touching people's hands or handling money.

Use natural soap.

Also consider the type of soap you use.

Dr Kenneth Seaton from the National Hygiene Foundation invested over twelve years and experimented with over five thousand different formulations of soap before identifying and developing the best soaps for hand washing.

In tests with thousands of subjects he found most bar soaps, liquid soaps and medicated soaps ineffective at reducing the load of bacteria and viruses under the fingernails.

Antibacterial soaps are more effective short term but a special report by the United States Centers for Disease Control recommended against long term use of antibacterial soaps due to potential skin damage from the harsh antibacterial agents.

Damaged skin is more likely to harbour viruses and bacteria.

Ingesting the antibacterial agents in these soaps could also destroy natural intestinal bacteria essential for good digestion and bowel health.

Long term use of antibacterial soaps might also encourage the development of resistant strains of viruses and bacteria referred to loosely as “superbugs”.

Worse still, attempting to completely eliminate viruses using antibacterial soaps and solutions could reduce natural immunity and especially slow the development of a young child's immune system.

For full details of exactly what kinds of soaps you should use for hand washing and what you can use if you don't have access to soap see the full “Advanced Hygiene Secrets” Audio CD and report.

Details are at the end of this report.

Most important of all take the time to wash and dry your hands thoroughly and avoid contact between your face and hands.

This is probably the simplest, first line of personal defence against influenza and the common cold.

But is there a simple method of slowing down these viruses once they've entered your body?

Slowing the progression of a virus...

When a respiratory virus like influenza or the common cold is inside your body it usually multiplies in your nasal passageways gradually working its way down your respiratory tract.

These viruses multiply faster when your nasal passageways are cool - while standing in the cold night air or in front of an air conditioner for example.

So you're more likely to develop a cold or flu during winter or in an air-conditioned room.

Your body responds to a developing virus by increasing mucous production and raising body temperature.

This explains the runny nose and fever when you catch the flu.

This clever defence mechanism serves several purposes.

Most respiratory viruses are heat sensitive.

Raising body temperature can slow their multiplication.

The extra mucous helps carry the virus out of your nasal passageways either to your stomach or out of your body through your nose or mouth.

You can mimic and even improve on your body's natural defences to a virus with a novel therapy called a facial dip...

Dr Kenneth Seaton, a pioneer in hygiene research, noticed during the summer months in Australia when children swam regularly in the ocean they experienced a much-reduced incidence of colds, flus, sinusitis and allergies.

Swimming in salt water can effectively clean the nasal passageways, washing away viruses, bacteria and allergens.

Facial dips.

So to mimic this action of cleaning your nasal passageways with salt water Dr Seaton developed the facial dip.

To perform a facial dip you fill a bowl or sink with warm salt water, immerse your face, blink several times and blow bubbles through your nose.

This raises the temperature in your nasal passageways and helps wash away any viruses.

95% reduction in respiratory infections.

So how effective are facial dips and hand washing in preventing respiratory infection?

An Australian study in 1985 performed by Dr Seaton showed a combination of cleaning the hands with his specially designed cleanzology soap and performing daily facial dips with his facial dip solutions reduced the incidence of severe respiratory infections and allergies by up to ninety five percent.
